

JOHN WILSON TISDALE.

The Old Turfman Dead, Aged 86.

The oldest turfman in America, John W. Tisdale, who has been entered in the futurity stakes for some time, finished the race at 8 A. M. Tuesday, winning, according to the judges, with ease and peacefulness. He was born in Louisa county, Va., Nov. 14, 1806, and was consequently 86 years of age. He was brought by his parents to Kentucky in 1810 and they settled on the old Harry Owsley place, near Crab Orchard. "Wilse," as he was called, became a jockey at nine and rode in his time some famous races. At 18 he gave up riding for training and has since brought many starters to the post. He professed religion in February, 1891, under the preaching of Eld. J. G. Livingston and became an earnest Christian. That gentleman preached his funeral sermon and eulogized him in the highest manner. The remains were interred at Crab Orchard in the presence of a large assembly.

LANCASTER, GARRARD COUNTY.

—The Press says Senator Hill's record on the silver question is one mile in two minutes and 8 seconds.

—Rev. Geo. O. Barnes will hold a series of meetings in Lancaster, beginning on the 13th of this month.

—Rev. George W. Dunlap will deliver a lecture entitled "A Trip Around the World," at the Court-house on Friday evening, June 10th.

—The friends of the presidential candidates of the various political parties, who are sanguine that their favorites will be nominated by acclamation should remember that after the nomination there is such a thing as being defeated by acclamation.

—Capt. W. C. McFarland, of the 16th U. S. Infantry, arrived with his family at Fort Douglas, Salt Lake City, Utah, on the 24th ultimo. His son, who had been sick in New York for many months stood the trip well and was greatly improved in health.

—Garrard College closes next Wednesday. The commencement exercises will begin with the Baccalaureate sermon Sunday night. On Monday evening the annual concert at the court-house hall. On Tuesday night the juveniles will give their entertainment in the College chapel, closing with the commencement exercises held at the Christian church Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

—The New York Press has ten photographs of James G. Blaine, taken in the last few days by the great artist, Sarony. He says that he has taken photographs of all the great men of this country for many years, including princes and noblemen, but the greatest man he ever turned the camera on was James G. Blaine. He expresses the opinion that Mr. Blaine is in excellent health and capable of doing any amount of hard work.

—The provisions of the new election law are required to be given in charge to the grand jury at each term of the court. As the law embraces 57 pages it will require about two hours to read it to the jury and it cannot well be condensed. What the jury will know about it after it is read to them is only a matter of conjecture for it is about as clear as mud. It will require a vigorous intellect and a vast amount of culture to know how to vote in accordance with the provisions of the new law.

—Gen. Miles is experimenting with bicycles at Chicago with a view to their introduction in the army. He claims that soldiers mounted on bicycles can travel four times as fast as on foot, but this can be done only on good, smooth roads. How he expects to get along with his army when traveling through the Great West in quest of red skins is not understood. The whole thing is ludicrous and is doubtless the suggestion of some maker of the machines who wants a job from the government.

—Mrs. Mary Hackley and son, Henry, of Cincinnati, spent a few days this week in Lancaster visiting relatives. Miss Carrie Woods has returned from a visit to Hustonville. Mrs. Hannah Scott has returned to Nicholasville. Rev. C. M. Reid is visiting his parents on Richmond avenue. Mrs. W. M. Bogler returned to Clarksville, Tenn., Wednesday. Mr. Forest Benton, who has been visiting his mother, has returned to Booneville. Miss Eugenia Dunlap, of Camp Nelson, is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. W. J. Landrum.

DANVILLE.

—Maggie, the little daughter of Mr. W. G. Proctor, is very ill with brain fever.

—There will be a closing exhibition of the College gymnasium this, Thursday, evening.

—Prof. H. K. Taylor, of Louisville, a son-in-law of Judge N. Sandifer, is visiting Danville friends.

—Revs. J. M. Worrall and E. H. Pierce delivered appropriate addresses here on decoration day.

—P. H. Idol and T. P. Curry are opposing candidates for common school trustee. The election is to be held Saturday.

—Rev. G. W. Dunlap, of Independence, is advertised to deliver Thursday night of this week a lecture entitled "A Trip Around the World," with illustrated views.

—E. H. Fox is preparing for the June number of the Centre College Cento photo engravings of Rev. J. M. Worrall, D. D., Rev. J. L. McKee, D. D., Rev. Hubbard, Prof. J. C. Fales, A. B. Nelson and W. D. Berry, all Centre College professors.

—Twenty three to nine in favor of the Widows was the way a base ball game ended Wednesday between the Widows and Orphans. The players were dressed in Mother Hubbards and other grotesque attire and presented a decidedly stunning appearance.

—Burglars blew open Booker Wilkerson's safe in his butcher shop at Junction City Sunday night and got nothing for their pains, as Booker had deposited his wealth the day before. Booker thinks it was not local talent that made the blast, as local talent never would have invaded his house in search of riches.

—Lafayette Price, a boy about 16 years old, a son of Lafayette Price, the stone-worker, was painfully hurt Wednesday by a large stone, which fell from the new common school building and scraped his back. Had the stone fallen a little further forward he would have been instantly killed.

—Hon. John Mason Martin, of Birmingham, Ala., who graduated from Centre College in 1856, is in town. Among his classmates were Judge C. A. Hardin, of Harrodsburg, Rev. Joshua Barbee, of Marshall, Mo., Senator J. C. S. Blackburn, J. H. Engleman, of the Farmers Bank, Danville, and Gov. J. B. McCreary.

—A rumor that Hannah Arthur, of Danville, daughter of the renowned Kitty Arthur, proprietress of the well-known Dumas House, a hotel where none but the 401 ever stopped, had been slain up in the mountains, has been run down. Hannah still lives, although she was handled pretty roughly a few days ago at Somerset by "another lady," whose husband she had been keeping company with.

—Bland Johnson has returned from a three months' absence in Texas, where he has been employed by a Texas pony purchasing agency. With his sombrero hat upon his noble brow, Bland, seated on one of his genuine Mexican ponies, and with immense spurs riveted to each heel, dashes about the streets of Danville as though he never knew any country but the far and wooly West and no life but the maddening and wild life of the bold, bad and reckless cowboy.

—Judge McFerran heard Tuesday evening a complaint made by Mike Cullen, the loquacious Irishman of the West End, against Lee VanArsdall and Chas. King, also of the West End, in which the defendants were charged with kulluxing said Cullen because he had not been like Cesar's wife in the matter of virtue. Mike admits that he is not altogether as pure as an icicle, but claims justification, self-defense or something of the kind. His honor reserved his decision for a day or two, but it is quite probable the case will be dismissed.

—The return party to-morrow, Friday night, given by the young men of Danville to the young ladies who invited and escorted them to the leap year party last February, promises to be a brilliant affair, with perhaps an exception in one particular, to-wit: Six or seven, or perhaps more, young ladies, who have received the printed invitations sent out to all, have been asked by no young men in particular to accompany them to the party. Boys, this won't do; if you don't want to take the girls, who took you in February, you ought at least to try and see that they have other company.

—In the matter of the Commonwealth of Kentucky against W. K. Vowells, of Junction City, for selling beer in Boyle county contrary to law, five judgments of $100 each were entered against the defendant by Judge McFerran, Tuesday. The remaining eight were dismissed on motion of the county attorney, as it was not thought there was sufficient evidence to sustain them. Besides it was generally believed that Mr. Vowells did not know he was violating law when he made the sales. He was proceeding under the law of April 19, 1886, which permitted him to sell "in packages not less than five gallons, or one dozen bottles of any size," and did not know that law had been repealed by the act of 1890, which prohibited sales "in any quantity less than ten gallons."

—The INTERIOR JOURNAL has been shown a copy of an affidavit sworn to by John Heiner before M. V. Payne, a justice of the peace for Marion county, Ohio, charging one L. P. Walter with obtaining a promissory note Jan. 12th, 1886, for $312 by false pretenses. Also a copy of an indictment found at the September, 1876, term of the Wyandot, O., court of common pleas, charging Lyman Walter and others with committing the crime of abortion on the person of Laura Bates, from the effects of which she died. These documents were used in the Louisville courts in the prosecution of an alleged irregular practitioner, known as Dr. Walter, who travels about through the State, and are to be used for the same purpose by the regular physicians here.

—Col. Nicholas McDowell, commissioner of agriculture, completed Tuesday the removal of two of his ancestors from the old Gov. Adair farm, in Mercer county, to the Danville cemetery. They were Samuel McDowell, who died in 1830, and his wife, who died in 1816. A portion of Mrs. McDowell's coffin was well preserved, showing the walnut wood and the velvet bound to the wood by brass tacks. From this same Mercer county farm the remains of Gov. Adair and wife were 16 years ago taken to the Frankfort cemetery. In the Danville cemetery in addition to those placed there Tuesday, and in the same lot, are the bodies of Col. Joseph McDowell and wife, Judge Samuel McDowell, the eminent jurist, and wife. The dust of Dr. Ephraim McDowell, another of this prominent pioneer family, is in the old cemetery, now called McDowell Park, adjoining the First Presbyterian church. Mr. Samuel McDowell, the father of the commissioner, who died in 1839, and his wife, are also buried in the Danville cemetery.

—Considerable surprise having been manifested at the closing of the Shelby City and Parkville telephone offices and the announcement that the telephones in private residences and business houses here, and in this vicinity, would be discontinued after the termination of the present contracts, the INTERIOR JOURNAL sought Prof. L. Eddy, the Danville manager, and obtained from him the following:

"By the rules of the American Bell Telephone Co. private parties can obtain contracts to operate toll lines, where each instrument is for public use.

Instruments can be obtained for private lines, lines connecting two or three houses and for private business.

An exchange is where lines from two or more private instruments to a central office meet, where connections are made as called for. An exchange must be owned and operated by a licensee only, a company controlling a whole State."

The E. Telephone Co., the licensee of this State, gave Mr. Eddy a contract for toll lines and exchanges, thus exceeding its powers. The contract having expired the company has called for the return of the instruments. Mr. E. has applied for a new contract and will probably be able to operate his toll lines again hereafter. For a while, however, his business will be stopped at the busiest season, which will cause much inconvenience.

LITTLE THINGS.

From Dear Kate's Scrap-Book.

A good-by kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel flog
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare,
After the toll of the day,
But it smooths the furrows out of the care
And lines on the forehead you once called fair
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say "You are kind,"
'I love you, my dear," each night;
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find,
For love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress,
We take, but we do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

Many accepted the Savior and a number were anointed for bodily ills, while all were benefited. The contributions were liberal and everything was done to make their stay pleasant. Mr. Barnes opens at Somerset Saturday evening.

—Selvidge shot and seriously wounded Wilburn France, at Pleasant View, last Tuesday morning. They quarreled over a house when some hard words were passed. Selvidge got his shot-gun and shot both loads into France's left arm and back, several of the shot penetrating the lungs. Selvidge then fled and at this writing has not been captured, although a posse are after him.

—Rev. L. E. Tupper preached a sermon to the graduating class of the Academy last Sunday evening at the Congregational church from the text, "Your old men shall dream dreams and your young men see visions." It was a very able discourse and many points could be found in it to benefit the old as well as the young. The class consists of E. E. Nelson, Frank Blakely and Charles Gragg.

—Mr. Frank D. Campbell, who was killed in the Wellington, Kan. cyclone, lived here several years and married Miss Watkins, of this place. She was visiting here when he was killed and had intended leaving Saturday morning to join him. She went to Penn., where his father lived, to his burying. They have four children, who were with their mother at the time of his death.

—The people's party of the 11th congressional district, held a convention here last Tuesday and nominated R. L. Durham, of Adair, for Congress, W. H. H. McDonald, of Knox, and J. F. McInery, of Pulaski, delegates to Omaha and A. W. Mellickham, of Laurel, presidential elector, and B. B. Wallace member of the State Central Committee. They had several speeches relating to their plan of work and what they intended doing on Tuesday evening at the court house.

—Monday was decoration day and there was quite a crowd in town. The programme of the day was made out by the G. A. R. post at this place. They met at the court-house, formed a procession and marched out to the Brer Creek Cemetery, where the graves of the federal soldiers were decorated and speeches from various prominent county men were listened to. One speaker forgot to eulogize the dead heroes and made his speech on the resolution adopted by the recent democratic county convention held at this place.

LIBERTY, CASEY COUNTY.

—A mass convention of the republican party met here for the purpose of nominating candidates for county offices and resulted in the following nominations: For circuit clerk, James Gibony, Jr.; for sheriff, James Brannon; for jailer John T. Refreshing Retreats.

Summer days are fast approaching and now is the time that excursionists, pleasure-seekers and sportsmen should figure out a route for their summer vacation. In doing so, the delightfully cool summer and fishing resorts located along the Wisconsin Central Lines come vividly to view, among which are Fox Lake, Ill.; Lake Villa, Ill.; Muckwonago, Waukegan, Cedar Lake, Neenah, Waubesa, Fishel, Bettendorf and Ashland, Wis. Wisconsin has within the last few years become the center of attraction for more pleasure seekers, hunters and fishermen than any other State in the Union, and each visit increases the desire to again see the charming landscapes, breathe the balmy fragrance that is a part of the invigorating atmosphere, wander through the colonnades of stately pines and look the speckled beauties with a hand made fly. For pamphlets containing valuable information, etc., apply to T. S. PATTY, D. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn. or JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

In almost every neighborhood throughout the West there is some one or more persons whose lives have been saved by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy, or who have been cured of chronic diarrhea by it. Such persons take especial pleasure in recommending the remedy to others. The praise that follows its introduction and use makes it very popular. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Dr. M. L. You should heed the warning, you are taking the first step into nervous prostration. You need a nerve tonic and Electric Bitters will find the best remedy for restoring your nervous system to its normal, healthy condition. Surprising results follow the use of this Nerve Tonic and Alternative. Your appetite returns, good digestion is restored, and the liver and kidneys resume healthy action. Try a bottle. A Little Girl's Experience in a Light House.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Tresscott are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse, Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter 4 years old. Last April she was taken down with measles, followed with a dreadful cough and turning into a fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain; she grew worse rapidly until she was a mere "handful of bones." Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at A. K. Penny's drug store.

Some of the brave Army boys may be interested in the following from Alex B. Pope, A. D. C., Commander Dep't Tenn. and Ga. He says, "We have had an epidemic of whooping cough here (Stewart, Tenn.) and Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been the only medicine that has done any good." There is no danger from whooping cough when this remedy is freely given. It completely controls the disease. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Dr. M. L. Bourne, Druggist and Optician, Stanford, Ky.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Dr. M. L. Bourne, the druggist, desires us to publish the following testimony, as he handles the remedy and believes it to be reliable. "I bought a box of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and applied it to my limbs, which have been afflicted with rheumatism at intervals for one year. It completely cured me. K. H. Farr, Holywood, Kan." I can truthfully say that Pain Balm has completely cured me. K. H. Farr, Holywood, Kan. A. B. Cox, the leading druggist at Holywood, vouches for the truth of the above statement.

PAPA'S BIRTHDAY.

How Little Madeline Spent Her Pennies and Made Everybody Happy.

"It's my papa's birthday," a childish voice calls out, and a little girl runs down the piazza to greet her playmate, who is coming across the street with a large doll.

"Is it really? Did he get any presents?"

"Oh, yes! Mamma gave him a scarf-pin, and Guy cuff-buttons. I'd lost my pennies, so had no present for papa, and only kissed him. I'm afraid he was sorry, for he looked like he was going to cry, and then he gave me pennies 'stead."

"I'll tell you what you could do with 'em, Madeline—buy him a present."

"What can I get?"

"Let's go up to Mrs. Smith's greenhouse for a plant, then we'll carry it in Dolly's carriage."

Two little girls are soon knocking at Mrs. Smith's door.

"Well, dearies, how do you come without nurse?"

"Left her home, 'cause we've got a secret."

"Dear me, what is it?"

"Oh, we'll tell you: Madeline couldn't give her papa a birthday present 'cause

PAPA'S BIRTHDAY.

she lost her pennies with the gypsies; but her papa gave her some more."

"And how many have ye?"

"We've got twenty-three to buy a flower."

"Would you like a rose?"

"Oh, yes."

Into the greenhouse they go, where Mrs. Smith gets the rose.

"It's beautiful!" they exclaim.

"Won't papa be glad?"

The plant is put in Dolly's carriage, and two happier little girls it would be impossible to find.

On their way they stop to pick daisies, which Alice thinks would make a pretty wreath.

"Oh, Madeline, don't go so fast; it makes the rose shaky. Wait a minute, so I can hold on while you drive."

Before long the little girls arrived home, where mamma was awaiting them anxiously, telling them never to go away without nurse, which they promised. Then they sat down on the piazza to make the wreath.

The rose was taken to the dining-room, and when the wreath was finished it was put around it in the center of the table.

Then the little girls eagerly watched papa's return.

"What's this?" was his first remark as he looked into the dining-room.

"It's my present for you," Madeline replied, rushing into his arms.

"How did you get it?"

"With the pennies you gave me."

And papa, holding her in his arms, turned to mamma, saying:

"But here is our best birthday present."—Emma Toussaint, in Our Little Ones.

CÆSAR AS A JUDGE.

How a Big Newfoundland Dispensed Justice to an Ill-Bred Cur.

Cæsar, our great Newfoundland, had a very friendly way with small dogs, because he was used to them, there being always a few house-dogs in the family; but he showed a decided preference; for although he would permit Juliet, a small Scotch terrier, to make his broad side her place of repose when she was out-of-doors, and seemed to like it, yet if Romeo, her mate, only a few pounds heavier, offered to follow her example, an ominous growl warned him off.

One of us children had to go every morning to the baker's for fresh rolls, and Cæsar carried the basket. On the square there was a tailor's establishment kept by a man named Gain, who owned a little reddish-brown dog which had arrived at old age without either its wisdom or its dignity. He had a bad habit of flying out at every dog which passed, even though the dog might be attending strictly to his own business, but he never meddled with Cæsar, unless he had his mouth too full to resent such impudence.

One morning I was accompanied by an elder sister—one who had a very high spirit, and who could never bear injustice in any form—and when the little cur made his usual attack, she remarked, in low tones: "Cæsar, put down the basket and teach him a lesson."

Cæsar needed no urging. Very deliberately he set the basket down, picked up the small red dog by the skin on the back of the neck, and began to trot off with his tormentor dangling from his mouth, in a very shrunken and scared condition. Cæsar soon broke from a trot into a run, and in much less time than it takes to tell it, he had sped around the square with his odd-looking burden, and, returning to the starting-point, dropped him from his mouth, very much terrified, but entirely unhurt.

The dog lost no time in getting inside the shop door, while Cæsar picked up his basket and walked proudly away, never again to be molested by Gain's cur, for if he caught a glimpse of Cæsar coming, he would disappear as if by magic, and he was much more careful about attacking other dogs as well. —Harper's Young People.

A MOVING-DAY STORY.

The New Baby Made Lots of Work for Winifred and Mabel.

It was moving day in the playroom. All the dolls, as well as the doll-house and the tin kitchens, the Noah's arks and little trunks, bureaus, chairs and playthings, were to be moved from the big back room where they had always been comfortably situated, into a little back hall room, which, though smaller, should be entirely devoted to them.

A new baby had been added to the family, and the baby and baby's nurse required so much extra space that it became necessary to give them the large room. And so the doll and the doll's colony had to be moved.

Winifred and Mabel Hastings, who were the little owners of the playroom and its contents, were up brightly and early on moving day, and right after breakfast set about their task of carrying the things into the little hall room. It had all been nicely cleaned, and upon the floor there was a bright new matting, while the walls were nicely hung with bright pictures carefully cut from papers and magazines. Thus Winifred and Mabel had none of the horrors of housecleaning to go through and had merely the task of moving.

After a consultation as to which should be moved first they decided that it was best to carry Sister Rose Gertrude and her colony of sick dolls and to dispose of them safely in one corner, so that none of the invalids should be disturbed by the tearing up of the other things in the old playroom.

Accordingly Winifred carefully carried Sister Rose Gertrude, who was a tall cloth doll, with a china head and in a long gray dress, with a big white apron and cap, into the new playroom and placed her in one corner.

Mabel followed with an armful of sick dolls. Among the invalids there was Miss Malaprop, who had lost one arm, and who was beyond cure because she was a jointed doll and the arm was broken squarely off at the shoulder joint. There was also Mrs. Kendal, who had been scalped one day by some terrible boys who had broken into the playroom with Brother Frank and who had taken this awful revenge because they had not been invited to join a little feast going on there at the time. Mr. Kendal had likewise suffered misfortune in having lost one of his eyes, which, being of glass, had broken one day when Mabel dropped him on the floor. This was specially mourned, as Mr. Kendal was a big Chinese doll and the only gentleman in the entire colony. Of course, no one thought of throwing him away, and so he was put in the hospital and given over to the tender care of Sister Rose Gertrude.

There were three or four dolls in a very dilapidated state of health, and one was so very ill that she had to be kept in bed covered up all the time. If the truth were known, the poor unfortunate had no head, but she was kept so carefully covered up under the counterpane, with only one foot sticking out at the foot of the little wooden bedstead, that no visitor in the playroom ever suspected that the occupant was so severely afflicted as to have really no head at all.

When the hospital had been comfortably disposed of the two little girls went back for the playhouse. This was rather large and heavy to move, and in getting it in the room at all the little tables were upset, the dishes were knocked out of the playhouse closet and the pictures fell off the walls. These had to be put to rights and the playhouse securely stationed where it would show off to the best advantage, as it was the particular ornament of the playroom.

But last of all Winifred and Mabel brought in the beauty and pride of the entire playroom. It was a large French doll named Patti. She could speak, sing two tunes and, if properly wound up and slightly supported on each side, could take a few steps very acceptably. Mme. Patti had a beautiful little gold chair of her own, and by its side there stood a trunk bound with white satin, which contained three beautiful evening dresses, for Mme. Patti never dressed in any other than full dress. All these moving preparations and arranging the things afterward took a great deal of time, and when Mabel and Winifred had at length got everything in place, even to the last paper doll and picture book, fully two hours had passed away, and the little girls were thoroughly tired out from their efforts.

"I never knew it was such hard work to move," said Winifred that day at the luncheon table.

"Nor I," said Mabel. "But it isn't everybody that can begin to move after breakfast and get all through before luncheon."

"No, indeed, it isn't," said Grandma Hastings, approvingly. And so Winifred and Mabel were satisfied with their morning's work, even though they felt very tired. —N. Y. Advertiser.

A Witty Answer.

Queen Caroline of England once inquired of Mr. Pitt, the elder, what it would cost to shut up the London public parks, and make them private grounds.

Mr. Pitt knew that the people would never submit to this, but his answer was polite. "Three crowns, your majesty," was his reply. —Harper's Young People.

SPIRITUAL AFFAIRS.

IN THE FURNACE.

In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength.—Isa. 26:15.

Canst thou not trust thy loving Lord,
O child of care and grief?
Thou couldst not desert him to Him,
He'll send thee sure relief.

Tell Him thy sorrow, weary one—
Lean on the strong for strength—
Strive to be brave, for thou shalt know
His purposes at length.

He loves thee with unyielding love,
He marks thy sigh, thy tears;
And not a single mournful sigh
Escapes His listening ears.

He understands thy special need,
Rest, then, in His sweet will;
O let thy murmuring soul be hushed;
Be patient and be still.

His image He doth long to see—
Reflected in His child;
To have thee bright, and pure, and fair,
Meek, lowly, undivided.

So many things hath He to teach,
That thou must learn while here;
What seemeth now to thee so dark
Shall soon be made most clear.

He'll keep thy heart from day to day,
Till life on earth shall cease;
And then He'll call thee to Himself
And Heaven's unbroken peace.

—Mary E. Bumstead, in London Christian.

REFUSE IT NOT.

Extend to the Once-Fallen Soul All the Help It Needs to Rise.

"His word is as good as his bond," said one gentleman in speaking to another of a third. "The company trusts him implicitly. He is the soul of honor."

"But you know he served a term in the state prison?"

"Certainly."

"And you call a jail-bird 'the soul of honor'?" You must be crazy!"

"How long ago did he serve his sentence?"

"Why, let me see. He is nearly sixty years old now. It must have been when he was about twenty-two or three."

"Well, my friend, a man might make considerable growth in grace during such an interval."

"Yes, he might, but I should say the chances are decidedly against him."

Unhappily there can be little doubt that "the chances are decidedly against" anyone who at any time or for any reason has stood at odds with his fellow men. Why should this be so? Why are we so prone to discover the evil rather than the good? To find fault more readily than to praise? To believe growth and improvement possible in all forms of vegetable and animal life, yet remain skeptical concerning the same process when illustrated in the daily lives of men and women?

The sapling which grew crooked for awhile when left to itself, was straightened again by a little labor on the part of the farmer. The tree which bore hard and acid apples was, by judicious pruning, made to produce rich and mellow ones. Resting in the grateful shade cast on the roadside by the towering elm or maple, we do not feel that it is necessary to call to mind the fact that it went wrong when it was beginning to throw out its branches. Eating the luscious fruit of the tree in autumn, we do not complain because at first it produced that of a poorer quality and flavor. Speeding along the road behind a gentle horse, we do not think it necessary to comment upon the years when he was a headstrong colt, kicking over the traces and tearing the carriage all to pieces. Why are we not as willing to allow to the human soul the same liberty of growth, the same chance to remedy its mistakes, the same opportunity to adjust itself to its surroundings as we unquestioningly allow the vegetable and animal creation? Just in proportion as the life of a man is more valuable than that of the tree or horse, should this faith be found in us, this sort of help be extended; and continued, also, notwithstanding obstacles or discouragements.

It may be true that the person who has once fallen is more to be distrusted than one who has always remained upright. The man who has once yielded to temptation is presumably the one less able than others to resist it. We never feel assured of the safety of our property while the servant who has once stolen has free access to it. But instead of being able to prove by any rules of logic that because the sinner has once sinned he may, must or will continue to sin, we must acknowledge our inability to prove anything about it, while admitting the possibility that the punishment for transgression may have wrought a lasting cure in the transgressor. At any rate, is there any instance in which "the benefit of the doubt" can be so humanely and wisely granted—provided there appear evidences of genuine repentance and reform—a benefit of equal value to him who gives and him who takes? The very fact that a man is able to say to his fellow-man: "I am holier than thou," is the best possible reason for this generosity in judgment. His very righteousness gives him an advantage in many ways. He stands confessedly his brother's superior in resistance to temptation and presumably in power and purity. Are not these advantages to be held in trust for the benefit of those less favored than himself? "There goes myself but for the grace of God," might be said by many men besides the immortal author of Pilgrim's Progress. To how many of us does the thought occur? "Lord, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are" is the more frequent reflection, felt in the heart, even if never formulated in the brain or uttered by the lips. Do we as reasonable, responsible Christian men and women really believe that "the greatest of all is charity," or do we merely enjoy the rhetorical beauty of the Apostle's famous words? If indeed it is our desire and constant aim to usually termed artistic merit. The verses were declined by various publications, and finally found their way into the corner of a country newspaper.

They attracted the attention of a mother, who had lost a child. She read them with such a sense of comfort, that she pinned the paper on the wall, and learned the stanzas while at her work. She handed them to friends; one after another bore grateful testimony to their worth, until, unconsciously, the whole circle were lifted into a higher atmosphere.

We are quick to envy others the possession of gifts. We forget that God's plan is unfolded by the use of such abilities as He has given, and that He, alone, knows the secret of fitting each influence into its place.

It may be easy to supply a cupful of cold water, but nothing is more grateful to thirsty lips. The helpful souls who are most lovingly remembered and the longest missed are those who have been mindful of small opportunities.

"You will find me only a commonplace minister," said a theological student to a committee who had brought him an invitation to become their pastor. "And you will find us only a commonplace people," was the reply. "We ought to be suited with each other. We like to hear plain talk from a plain man."

It is your best always that helps. Not the best as we gauge by comparison, not trying to write or to pray according to some cherished ideal, but simply your own best. It may seem very poor and weak, but if it has reached out and up, it receives through Christ a Divine baptism. What you admire so much in another is not needed for the work God has given to you.

Doing one's best is like a seed planted in fertile soil and watered by gentle rains. It is sure to grow, and growth includes power.—N. Y. Observer.

GOD WILL EXPLAIN THEM.

Dark Mysteries That Will Be Explained in the Light of the Throne.

I see every day profound mysteries of Providence. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves in Greenwood and Laurel Hill that need to be examined. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, almshouses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune, that demand more than human solution. Ah! God will clear it all up. In the light that comes from the throne no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illuminated as plainly as though the answer were written on the Jasper walls or sounded in the temple anthem. Bartimeus will thank God that he was blind; and Lazarus, that he was covered with sores; and Joseph, that he was cast into the pit; and Daniel, that he dined with the lions; and Paul, that he was hump-backed; and David, that he was driven from Jerusalem; and that invalid, that for twenty years he could not lift his head from the pillow; and that widow, that she had such hard work to earn bread for her children. The song will be all the grander for earth's weeping eyes and aching heads, and exhausted hands, and scourged backs, and martyred agonies.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

Our Children's Reading.

Children's books are healthier than they used to be. We need a religious literature that shall take for its model of excellence a boy that loves God and can digest his dinner in two hours after he eats it. Be not afraid to say in your account of his decess that the day before you lost him he caught two rabbits in his trap down in the meadow, or soundly thrashed a street ruffian who was trying to upset a little girl's basket of cold victuals. I do not think that Heaven is so near to an ill-ventilated nursery as to a good gymnasium.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

Experience as Teacher.

We can not guide others in paths which we have not traversed; we can not comfort others if we have never known need of comfort ourselves; we can not sing to others a song in the night which we have never learned ourselves; we can not teach others how patiently to watch for the Lord as they that watch for the morning, if we have never known ourselves the experience of the night of darkness from which God seemed to absent Himself, and never learned how to look patiently out of the casement to see the darkness of the night turn into the gray dawn of the morning.—Christian Union.

WISE SAYINGS.

—If I fear, I either do not believe, or I do not believe enough.—Bonnel.

—To return good for good is human; evil for evil, brutal; evil for good, diabolical; good for evil, divine.—Royard.

—Blessed are they who see the day of glory, but more blessed are they who contribute to its approach.—Bishop Secker.

—The Christian is the man who can say this first, last and always: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage."—Ram's Horn.

—God's benefits come not alone, but one is a pledge of another. A drop of dew from Heaven is prognostic of a gracious shower, which nothing can draw dry but ingratitude.—Farinon.

—Our gratitude is false and of no avail unless accompanied with newness of life and newness of life can not endure long if our thankful sense of the grace to which we owe our deliverance declines.—Quessel.

—The simplest conception of prayer is the true one—"an offering of our desires unto God"—asking Him for what we desire. A child can understand it, and it is not made any plainer by explanation.—United Presbyterian.

—The true ennoblement of life will be found as we are in right relations with God. When we seek, as Enoch did, to talk with God, then we must be separate from sin, and our daily course will be marked by righteousness. "Where God is sin can not be, and where God is, all beauty must be."—Christian Inquirer.

A TIMELY RESCUE.

Getting Away from Gibraltar Under Great Difficulties.

The British held Gibraltar, but communication was cut off by a blockade. The British fleet was fifty miles away, preparing for an attack. Dispatches must be sent to Gibraltar, and an answer brought back.

A large sum was offered for the work. My captain accepted. I was only a boy, but could row better than the best sailor; so he selected me to help.

We ran down within fifteen miles of Gibraltar, by eight o'clock, on the first dark night; then, in a little dory, we two started to make that thirty miles before daylight the next morning, or to die in the attempt.

There was just enough of a breeze to deaden the sound of our oars. We went straight as a line for Gibraltar. Twice we passed directly under the nose of a big ship, but no one thought of looking for a bit of a cork with two men in it.

We were at the wharf but seventeen minutes, and spent the time in drinking coffee and running up and down. At eight minutes before eleven, just two hours and fifty-two minutes from the start, we dipped our oars to return.

All that had favored our getting in was against our getting out again. Even the wind had risen and the sea with it. There was a storm coming up, and, even if we could keep the dory afloat, the lightning before long would show us up.

The captain sat in the prow, with the compass in his lap. It was only opened a hair's breadth, to hide the light; and he was at the same time pushing on his oars that he might keep a lookout for the enemy's ships.

Three times we dodged them, and once a voice hailed us in the darkness, but we could not understand what was said, and did not stop.

I had rowed over those waves, that were rising higher and higher, till I was ready to drop the oars and let the dory go where it would. The captain looked at his watch by the compass light, and reported half-past one.

"THEY WERE BEARING DOWN UPON US WITH SAIL AND OAR."

I groaned as I replied that I must take a rest or I could never pull through the remaining hour.

Just at that moment there was a blinding flash of lightning.

The captain and I both uttered an exclamation of dismay.

There was a big ship not a hundred feet away on one side; and on the other side a boat with half a dozen men in it!

Three more flashes followed in quick succession. They had sighted us and were bearing down upon us with sail and oar.

"If the lightning holds up they may lose us," whispered the captain. "There are the dispatches, wrapped in lead. Throw them overboard before you give up. Pull for all you're worth, now, and if there's another flash I'll give them a broadside from this rifle."

I ground my teeth. The oars bent and the rowlock cracked.

Hark! a voice! "Capt. Beer, ahoy!" The rifle dropped. My oars flew out of the water.

It was the voice of our second officer. Fearing the weather would be too much for our people he had taken our points and run six miles nearer. It was a dangerous risk, but so well had we kept our lines, through that darkness and storm, that we came within a hundred feet of colliding.—Lieut. Col. Thorndike, in Wide Awake.

A Bragging Match.

A Parisian paper relates the following story of a contest in boasting which, it says, took place between three artists of Marseilles. It should be explained that Parisian writers always put their "tall talk" into the mouths of Marseilles people.

"My dear," said one of the artists, "yesterday I painted a pine board in imitation of marble, and did it with such fidelity that when the board was put into a pond of water it sunk like stone."

"Pooh!" said the second; "that is nothing. Yesterday I happened to hang up my thermometer on the back of the frame of my 'View in the Arctic Regions,' and the mercury instantly went down to twenty degrees below zero."

"All that is nothing at all," said the third artist. "You know my portrait of the old Marquis of Camargne? Well, it is so life-like that it has to be shaved three times a week!"

What She Gained.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," runs the old adage, and when Miss Almira Stevens' older sister Melitab decided to go out west to visit her brother for six months, Miss Almira was not long in finding one bright spot in her bereavement.

"How in the world will you ever get along without Hitty, Almira?" asked a sympathizing neighbor. "Why, you ain't ever been parted before since you was children, have you?"

"Never," replied Miss Almira, sorrowfully. "You'll miss her dreadful, won't you?"

"Yes, I shall. But then," added Miss Almira, a faint flush rising to her face, "you know the old adage, 'I'll have the best of both worlds if I can,' and I shall have the best of both worlds if I can."

"You'll miss her dreadful, won't you?"

"Yes, I shall. But then," added Miss Almira, a faint flush rising to her face, "you know the old adage, 'I'll have the best of both worlds if I can,' and I shall have the best of both worlds if I can."

MY TROUBADOUR.

High on the maple swinging,
To usher in with singing
The wedding of the dawn
With the dew upon the lawn,
You cheery little poet!
Although you do not know it,
And see nobody near you,
I hear you—I hear you!

Hark! from the orchard hidden,
A serenade unbidden!
And by this dainty clew,
Robin, I know it's you.

MY TROUBADOUR.

No, you cannot deceive me,
Pretending that you leave me;
I found you out, you dear, you—
I hear you—I hear you!

Now on the meadow floor,
The scarlet troubadour
Such melody is letting
The sun forget its setting!
You music-beating heart!
Doing your little part.

You shall be seen and heard,
Though you are but a bird;
So never, never fear you,
I hear you—I hear you.

—Charles H. Crandall, in St. Nicholas.

MEXICAN PULQUE.

The Natives Milk the Plant for Nearly Six Months.

Have you a conservatory or a window garden for winter flowers? If so, perhaps you have century plants in some of the pots. We had one in our window through the winter in our dear New England home. In the summer it stood on the veranda. Here in Mexico, where we are living now, there is no winter, and it would seem as out of place to have a century plant among house flowers as it would in New England to have squash vines in the bay window.

I used to be told century plants were so called because they bloomed only once in a hundred years; but farmers have great fields of century plants all around us, so now I know all about them. They grow so strong and large that sometimes a man can stand upon the leaves without bending them to the ground.

It is the nature of this plant to blossom at the end of seven years; then it dies. The farmer does not allow the plant to bloom, however, for when the bud appears, way down in the center, like a great cabbage, he cuts it out with a long knife, leaving a hole like a basin instead. The sap which would have fed the bud fills the basin, and the farm hands begin a work which they call "milk the pulque" for instead of century plants they are called pulque plants here in Mexico.

Most of the farm hands are Mexican Indians. Their dress consists of shirt and trousers, made of a very thin, dirty white material. They wear huge hats on their heads, and on their feet only thin strips of grass or leather, bound like skates. Each one carries on his back a hogskin bag, covered with a netting of small rope, to keep it from bursting when it is full. In his hand he holds a long-necked, hollow Mexican gourd, with a small hole in each end of it.

He stops at each pulque plant and puts one end of the gourd down into the basin. He puts his lips over the hole in the other end of the gourd and draws with all his might until he has forced all the sap into the gourd. Then he turns it round quickly and lets it run out into the hog skin.

Sometimes the basins fill up three or four times a day, and they keep milking the pulque plant for nearly six months.

When his bag is full he empties it into a large barrel, and finally it is made into a drink that the Mexicans seem to enjoy as much as we do lemonade.

I tasted it once, but did not like it.—Warren H. Frych, in Our Little Men and Women.

The Whole Story.

It is natural to boys and girls to desire to know how a story "comes out." They are not satisfied with an abrupt termination when some good point is reached. A bright boy once heard the story of William Tell for the first time, and was very much interested in it. He followed eagerly the account of the shooting of the apple by Tell from his boy's head, and looked unsatisfied when the story came to a conclusion.

"Well, go on!" he said.

"But that's all the story."

"How can it be?" exclaimed the boy. "You didn't tell me who had the apple to eat!"

JOHN M. McROBERTS, Sr., sold to M. D. Elmore 12 acres of the hill back of their residences on the other side of the St. Asaph, at $115. It cost Mr. M. $92 an acre when he bought it a number of years ago.

MR. T. M. PENNINGTON is making preparations to build a two-story dwelling on the site of the one burned last fall. It will be after the Queen Anne order and will materially help the appearance of Lower Main street.

THE tin wedding of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Cooper was celebrated Tuesday evening and they are now in possession of enough tinware to start a store. Quite a number of friends were present and enjoyed greatly an elegant supper.

Mrs. WM. COOLEY asks us to thank all the kind friends, who worked so bravely to save her property, which, but for them would have been a total loss. She denies that four dogs got burned up, though. There were only two and they were under the house, not in it.

THE father of the East End bride, who was mentioned in last paper in connection with a scandal, says the report originated through the jealousy of a scheming woman and has no foundation whatever. What was taken for something else proves to be the dropsey.

LITTLE JOHNNIE COOK, who ran away from his home a few weeks ago and was found in jail at Lexington, has gone again and his parents are in search of him. The little fellow is bent on leaving home and the best thing his parents can do is to let him stay until he gets tired of it.

Mrs. T. W. MILLER has sold her residence and lot of two acres, on Lower Main street, to John N. Menefee for $5,000, which seems to be reasonable enough. Possession will be given Oct. 1st and Mrs. Miller with Mr. King Sam Owsley's family will remove to his splendid farm at Walnut Flat. The young people regret very much to have the young ladies go away, even if it but five miles into the country.

WAIVED.—West King, who killed Frank Fish at Crab Orchard, waived an examination when his case was called Wednesday and he was held in $1,500 bail to circuit court. Of course he will not be able to give it. The mitigating circumstances are that Fish drew a pistol on him in the afternoon and when King told him he was not armed, said: "Go and arm yourself, I intend to kill you." King went home and got his pistol and returning told Fish he was ready for him, at the same time opening fire. Fish's pistol wouldn't work and King got in his work on the fifth fire.

DR. T. B. LEWIS tells us that the other day he started his son Logan, aged 12, in a buggy for his sister, Miss Maggie, whose school had closed at Buckeye. When near Pink Cottage the boy says he remembers to have seen a man approaching in a buggy and after that all was a blank. The murderous scamp drove into his buggy, breaking it and throwing the boy out, where he lay insensible for some time. The horse was afterwards found some distance further on. The boy does not know who the man was, but if Dr. Lewis could find out he would make it hot for him. It was a mean and cowardly act.

COLLEGE CONCERT.—The lowering, leaking clouds of Wednesday threatened to seriously interfere with the attendance at the annual concert of Stanford Female College, but by sundown the skies brightened and made the evening most propitious for the entertainment, which was taken advantage of by the largest crowd that ever attended a similar performance at Walton's Opera House. There were between 500 and 600 people in the house, more than 400 of whom paid the admission fee. The programme was carried out like clockwork and the little ladies did honor to their capable trainers. The only thing that could be said against it was that it was too long, but this could hardly have been avoided with so many pupils to "show off." At 8 o'clock the curtain rose and for nearly four hours, the following programme was given as fast as the different changes could be made:

The recitations, pictures and posing were superintended by Mrs. J. M. Hubbard; Miss Louis Tipton managed the callisthenics; Miss Georgia Kirtley drilled the primary class and Miss Gertrude Howard's pains and patience was evinced in the excellence in which her class rendered the musical numbers.

All the ladies deserve the highest praise and judging from the way the audience enjoyed the performance they received it. The song, "Ten Little Sunflowers," in which the heads of ten little ladies appeared in the flowers painted by Miss Eva Bedinger, was very artistically given and in response to requests was reproduced. The shaking quakers, the recitations, the music, both vocal and instrumental, each deserve especial and extended mention, which we are not now able to give. The statuary and pictures were an artistic triumph and the graceful posings of the lovely maidens, in snow, white toilets, were received with admiration and wonder. It was "high onto" the solemn hour of midnight when the last number was given and the audience slowly deserted the hall where brilliancy and beauty had reigned so charmingly.

The commencement exercises were held last night, but we go to press too early to give a detailed report. The five sweet girl graduates read essays as follows: Miss Essie Burch, "Things Don't Turn up Until Somebody Turns Them up;" Miss Susie Lasley, "Mine and Thine;" Miss Anna Menefee, "Volunteers for the Millennium;" Miss Ella Wright, "There is Nothing More Royal Than Truth, More Kingly Than Kindness;" Miss Ophelia Lackey, "I Shall Not Pass This Way Again."

Immediately after the commencement exercises, which were expected to conclude at 9:30, the V. A. M.'s were to entertain at the College in honor of the graduating class.

The principal, Prof. J. M. Hubbard, tells us that the session has been the most prosperous since he took charge five years ago. The number of pupils enrolled was 104 and the attendance was large all the time. No sickness or death has marred the peace and happiness that has prevailed among the pupils, and on the whole the faculty has great cause for congratulation. We hope to see each member back again, for they have done well and earned the most hearty plaudits of their patrons.

The Coal Operators and Miners.

(To the Editor Interior Journal.)

The public is aware that since May 1 there has been a strike at the coal mines in Laurel county, resulting from a disagreement between miners and operators about wages. After a meeting of both parties and an effort to settle the matter among themselves, which failed, the operators proposed to the miners, who are Knights of Labor, to arbitrate the whole matter, arbitration being one of the cardinal principles of the Order of Knights of Labor, which proposition the miners rejected, insisting upon their position alone. Under this state of case, the coal works having now been idle for a whole month, on June 1 the operators determined by unanimous vote not to treat longer with Knights of Labor, as they had abandoned their former principles, and to demand of the men the houses they were occupying that they might employ to work and put in these houses men who are not Knights of Labor.

—Among a multitude of resolutions passed by the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly during its final hours, was one denouncing the lynching of negroes in this country and another condemning the use of tobacco.

FOR SUNDAY READING.

WHEN AND HOW.

In Thine own time, Lord Jesus, Thine own way,
Thou it take me home;
Thou only knowest when and how for me
The end shall come.

And I am glad that I have naught to do
With time and way;
I could not choose, if it were left to me,
I could not say.

I am so busy, Lord, and still there seems
So much to do!
The days crowd on, each short, each incomplete
When it is through.

Far on, above me, stands Myself, ideal,
What I might be;
And ever, eager, I am reaching on
To that I see.

Yet, Master, only let Thy call be clear;
And then, although
My life may seem unfinished, poor and small,
I'll gladly go.

Thine is the way, Lord Jesus; knowing this
I'm not afraid;
Thou hast been through the bitterness of death,
Its deepest shade.

I'll go the way that seems to Thee the best,
And trust Thy love,
When, letting go of earth, I trembling turn
To that above.

So, Lord, I'll live, and make the most and best
Of time till then;
Content to leave to Thee, in quiet rest,
The how and when.

FORGIVENESS.

It and God's Mercy Made a Useful Man of a Criminal.

During the late civil war an assembly camp was for a time established in the outskirts of Brooklyn, near what has since been known as "East New York." The officer in command, afterward a well-known general, and later the chief of police of Brooklyn, was then a colonel. Residing in the town, he was accustomed to return home at night after having seen things quiet among this large body of men as yet unassigned to regiments.

One night, at a very late hour, an orderly galloped to the colonel's door in Pacific street and shouted from the saddle: "Colonel! Quick! The whole camp is in uproar! Mike S—'s saloon has been set on fire and—"

Almost instantly the colonel was also mounted, and was clattering off to learn with his own eyes the rest of the story.

"As I crossed the railroad in front of the camp," he once said to the writer, "my mare was forced to walk and pick her way. I remember seeing a soldier who lay flat between the tracks, with his musket in his hand. I can see the gleam of his bayonet even now. But as the guard had been roughly handled at the gate, I supposed this was one of the poor fellows who had been knocked over at his post.

"At all events, the mare sprang clear over him, and took me at once into the midst of the lawless crowd. They had, indeed, fired the drink shop, and were playing with the fagots like drunken demons."

Order was soon restored, and the incident passed from the officer's mind amid the busy scenes of actual war. A year later three deserters, condemned to be shot, were brought before him at headquarters in the field.

"It seemed a hard fate," he said afterward, "and capital punishment being new to us, I took it upon myself to exhort the fellows to respect themselves, serve their country, and ask God to help them to be decent men; then I sent them back to the ranks, forgiven."

"The boy on my left, the tallest of the three, appealed to a tender spot in my heart. He was rough and ugly, but he was handsome, too handsome to be shot in a ditch. I thought of my own boy. Then, too, there was something in his look that I never shall forget, especially when I spoke about their asking God's help to behave themselves."

The pardoned deserters went back to their places, and this incident also passed out of the officer's recollection.

One day a letter came to the police headquarters in Brooklyn, addressed to the chief. It said in part:

"I was once intending to shoot you in mere wanton wickedness. But God's mercy saved me. I know not why else I did not pull the trigger."

He was the soldier who had lain between the rails at East New York!

"Again I was intending to spring upon you when in your tent for desertion. But God's mercy spared me. You forgave me. It was that pardon which touched my poor, orphaned heart. . . . I sought Heaven's pardon, for pardon seemed so sweet! . . . For five years now I have been rector of — church in this great city of —. The mercy of God having held me up so long, I may safely trust it will to the end."—Youth's Companion.

GOD'S WORK FOR US.

It May Seem Very Poor and Weak, But It Has a Power.

The world is made up of ordinary people. Now and then a genius shines like Sirius among the stars of the second magnitude, but the sum of two talents is the common supply. They belong to the rank and file of human beings, to whose care the interests of the world have been intrusted.

In a block of dark porphyritic granite a line of fire opal is discovered. The colors glow and deepen in the sunlight. It is like a bed of rainbows, and valued as a precious gem. The foundations of our earth are coarse and common substances, both granite and trap. They lie around us every day, and we look upon them with indifference. But they rear the mountains; they hold the rivers in their course. The ice and snow have borne down huge boulders for walls and bulwarks. Their ledges furnish labor to thousands of men. Because gems are hidden away in crevices, a pebble need not be counted as worthless.

Men and women need help along their own line. Someone is always waiting to receive a thought, that needs to be simply expressed in plain language.

A woman who had passed through a season of trial, and received spiritual help, wrote out her experience in the form of poetry. The story was told in a homely way, and did possess what is

The bargain he had made was irrevocable. He won his percentage; he paid his life, dying suddenly of one of those mysterious brain diseases, to which so many overtasked Americans fall victims.

He bequeathed to his daughters costly tastes and habits, a sum of money insufficient to gratify them, and nervous, enfeebled bodies.

If he had chosen in his health and youth a simple life, apart from the struggle for money and fashion, he would in all probability now be a strong, helpful, happy man, surrounded by healthy, vigorous children, ready to undertake whatever good work God had set them.

There is a story in the Bible of a young man, the heir to a destiny which would have set him and his children apart from all others throughout the history of the world, who, in a momentary fit of hunger, sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.

Few young people think of the story now, perhaps, or attach any significance to it in their own lives. But every boy who is crowding into the city, willing to sacrifice health, nervous strength, moral principle and quiet happiness in the effort to gain money and a place in the fashionable world, is selling for a mess of pottage a heritage as noble as Esau's.

GOD WILL PREVAIL.

The Proofs We Have That Our World Is Governed by a Moral God.

A prominent characteristic of the state of mind produced by Christian faith is confidence in the ultimate victory of good over evil. Here again is a truth over which much in the world at large, and in the lives of single men, may well cast a shadow. "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart," the "ungodly are in no peril of death, but are as lusty and strong; they come in no misfortune like other folk, neither are they plagued like other men." This is the appearance which human life wears from age to age. Here and there we see notorious exceptions to the rule. But, upon the whole, evil seems to be in possession, and, as far as experience goes, it is likely to hold its own. When a Christian is haunted by this impression, which strikes at persistent faith in the moral supremacy of God, he turns his thoughts to the resurrection. Never did evil obtain such a triumph over pure goodness as when it nailed Jesus Christ, our Lord, to the cross of shame. Never was the ultimate victory of goodness so clearly vindicated as on the morning of the resurrection. Of this supreme event, Joseph's exaltation to be the ruler of Egypt, David's triumph over Saul, Israel's deliverance, in one age from Egyptian bondage, in another from that of Babylon, were but faint adumbrations. The greatest proof that ever was given that the world is governed by a moral God was given when Jesus, the sinless victim of triumphant evil, was rescued by the resurrection from the clutches of death.—H. P. Liddon, Canon of St. Paul's.

A Higher Hand.

A little boy sat in front of his father and held the reins that controlled a restive horse. Unknown to the boy, the reins passed around him and were also in his father's hands. He saw an occasion to pull them. With artless simplicity the child looked around, saying: "Father, I thought I was driving; but I am not, am I?" Thus it is often with men who think they are shaping a destiny which a higher hand than theirs is really directing. They do their own will because it is also the will of God. A stronger hand guides them: a mightier power holds the helm of their vessel, and saves from rock and wreck. Happy are they who yield to the guidance of the Almighty hand.—Golden Words.

Cold as Snowdrops.

There are some Christians who are precise in their tastes, unimpassioned, pure as snowdrops and as cold. They never shed any tears, they never get excited, they never say anything rashly, they never do anything precipitately. Their pulses never flutter, their nerves never twitch, their indignation never boils over. They live longer than most people, but their life is in a minor key. They never run up "C" above the staff. In their music of life they have no staccato passages. Christ planted them in the church, and they must be of some service or they would not be there. But they are snowdrops.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

—A Presbyterian minister in a note to the editor of the Canadian Baptist, mentions a characteristic of Mr. Spurgeon, which is worthy of note. POOK BRUNO'S DINNER.

How He Was Robbed of It by Jim, His Hungry Comrade.

When Bruno's dinner was brought to him by Susan, the cook, he was not hungry. She was going out, and so fetched it earlier than usual.

"There," she said to herself, "it's quite a step to the end of the garden, and if I forgot the poor dog, no one else would take the trouble to feed him, so I'll go while I think of it."

You see, Susan was kind to animals, and could not bear to have them neglected.

So she put down the plate with the big bone beside Bruno's little house, and gently patted his head. Bruno jumped up on his hind legs, and tugged at his chain, wishing he might go with Susan. But she said:

"No, old fellow; Susan cannot take you to-day, for she has got to go to town; so take care of the house, and eat your nice dinner."

But the cook did not know what was going to happen.

It was a hot afternoon, and Bruno lay down in front of his little house and thought.

He thought how pleasant it would be to go to town with Susan—there was so much to amuse one in town. He thought how dull it was to have to stay at the end of the garden. There was nothing to see but some stupid flowers, and trees, and blue sky. "I'll take a nap," he thought; "nothing happens here."

For Bruno did not know that something would happen, any more than the cook did.

So he stretched out his paws, and, putting his head on them, he was soon fast asleep.

Now, all this time a pair of bright eyes were watching what took place, through a crack in the fence. These eyes belonged to a big black-and-white dog called Jim, who lived next door. He was hungry, and Bruno's bone looked so good that he felt he must have it. He saw that Bruno's chain was short, and if he could only snatch the bone, and get out of reach quickly, he would be safe. It was selfish in him, but Jim was a mean dog.

He watched until Bruno was really asleep, and then ran to a place in the fence that had been broken, where he thought he could get through. But it had been nicely mended. He ran wildly back and forth until he found a place where he could just squeeze through.

Then, very slowly and quietly he came, gliding along, nearer and nearer, until he was within reach of the bone. He made a wild leap, and snatched the bone, but in his hurry, it fell with a rattling sound against the plate. Bruno woke and jumped up, barking loudly.

But Jim did not intend to lose the bone, for which he had taken so much trouble, and snatching it, this time firmly, he bounded away. Poor Bruno rattled his chain, barking fiercely.

He made so much noise that the children who were playing in the garden heard him, and came to see what was the matter. You may be sure that Jim was by this time out of sight on the other side of the fence.

The children could not see anything wrong, and thought Bruno was barking at some one who had passed in the road.

But as they were going away Paul, the oldest boy, saw the empty plate, and said:

"I believe no one has given Bruno his dinner, for Susan is out. I will run and get it." So, after all, Bruno had his dinner.—St. Nicholas.

JIM MAKES GOOD HIS ESCAPE.

MONKEYS AS CASHIERS.

They Have a Peculiar But Effective Way of Testing Coin.

A newspaper published in the ancient city of Calcutta—it is difficult to think of such an ancient city in connection with newspapers—is authority for the statement that in Siam monkeys are often used by business men as cashiers. In Siam there are vast quantities of counterfeit money in circulation, and by it even the smartest men are deceived. Not so a monkey.

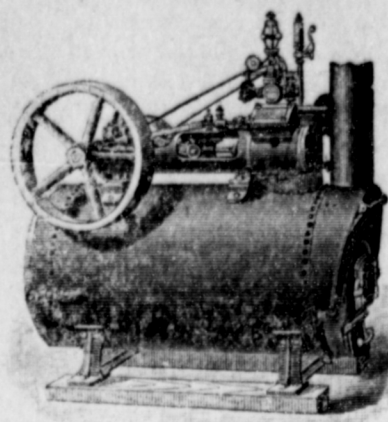

This odd cashier has a peculiar way of testing coin. Every piece is handed to him, and he picks up each bit of money, one at a time, and meditatively puts it into his mouth, testing it with grave deliberation. If the coin is good, he declares the fact plainly. He takes it from his mouth, and carefully places it in its proper receptacle beside him. He has pronounced judgment, and everyone is satisfied that the judgment is correct.

But if the coin is bad, the cashier makes known his verdict in an equally unmistakable manner. He throws it violently from his mouth to the floor, shaking his head with as much disgust as the merchant himself might feel at being imposed upon. With loud chattering and angry gestures he makes known his displeasure at being presented with a bad piece of money. The merchant could not express it better.—Harper's Young People.

Our family journal is a monthly publication consisting of 16 pages, filled with the best literature of the day, by some of the best authors, and is worthy of the great expense we are doing for it. Eight years ago the New York World had only about 15,000 daily circulation; to-day it has over 300,000. This was obtained by judicious advertisement and a lavish expenditure of money. What the proprietor of the N. Y. World has accomplished we feel confident of doing ourselves. We have a large capital to draw upon, and the handsome premium we are giving you will certainly give us the largest circulation of any paper in the world. The money we are spending now among our subscribers will soon come back to us in increased circulation and advertisements. The Crayon Portrait we will have made for you will be executed by the largest association of artists in this city. Their work is among the finest made, and we guarantee you an artistic Portrait and a perfect likeness to the original. There is nothing more useful as well as ornamental than a handsome framed Crayon Portrait of yourself or any member of your family; therefore this is a chance in a lifetime to get one already framed and ready to hang in your parlor absolutely free of charge.
